SCAM ALERT

Victim received a call from “Danielle Lamb” who claimed to be with Publisher Clearing House, advising the victim she had won a $7.5 million giveaway. However, she would have to pay $1,750 for the processing fee and then she would receive the check for $7.5 million.

The victim was then contacted by a “George William” who worked with “Danielle” and was going to walk the victim through the process to make the processing fee payment. “George” had the victim drive to Walmart and purchase two (2) Vanilla gift cards for $500 each. She was then instructed to provide “George” the numbers on the back, which she did. Fortunately, the victim locked her keys in her car and had to call her spouse for assistance. When her husband found out what was happening, he immediately had the victim disconnect from the call and explained this had been a scam.

Victim was contacted by someone claiming to be with her bank. The victim proceeded to give the caller her credit card information. Shortly afterward, $17,000 from the victim’s account was routed overseas.

Victim “googled” the Apple customer service phone number online and called. The victim advised during the phone call she entered her social security number, name, and date of birth. She was advised to obtain Target gift cards to provide to the caller for them to repair her phone. Victim advised they had obtained two (2) $250 cards, one (1) $350 card, and an additional $200 card and provided the card information to the subject over the phone and never heard back from them.

Victim stated that someone intercepted checks in his mail that were meant for him. Soon after, on January 15th, 2024, he got a letter from a bank stating that someone had opened an account with his name. They attempted to cash the two (2) checks that had been stolen from the victim, one for $6,169.77 and another for $2,492.70. Due to the fraud procedures in place at the bank, the victim sustained no monetary loss.

Victim was called by an unknown individual pretending to be his bank, a common telephone scam. This individual asked for his social security number and bank information, which the victim provided. He was later contacted by his bank and informed that there was suspicious activity on his account. He also was contacted by CashApp and was told there was an account attached to his bank but under a different name. Due to fraud procedures in place at the victims’ bank and CashApp, the victim sustained no monetary loss.
